

Celebrate UNO open house discontinued

By Lori Safranek

Celebrate UNO, the university's annual open house, will not be held this year, according to Nancy Castilow, manager of community relations for UNO.

Celebrate UNO began at the conclusion of the Diamond Jubilee fund-raising program, Castilow said.

"What we really wanted to do was create an event that not only thanked the donors, but also let the general public come to UNO and see what the campus really had to offer," she said. "We certainly did that."

Castilow said although there are no official attendance figures, thousands of local residents attended Celebrate UNO each year.

The decision to discontinue Celebrate UNO was based on the cost of the event, uncertainty of corporate sponsorship and the amount of work required of students, faculty and staff. University Relations recommended the discontinuance to Chancellor Del Weber, and he agreed, Castilow said.

"Celebrate UNO is a very expensive project,"

Castilow said.

The 1991 Celebrate UNO cost about $34,000, with UNO paying $11,000 of the total cost, she said. Corporate sponsors contributed the rest.

"I simply think there are ways we can spend money and advertise UNO and get just as much good will for UNO," Castilow said.

A survey conducted after each Celebrate UNO also contributed to the discontinuance of the event, Castilow said.

"At the beginning, the chancellor told us Celebrate needed to be a grassroots effort," she said. The survey showed faculty, staff and students who worked with the event were becoming dissatisfied.

Castilow said no plans are under way to replace Celebrate UNO, but events are planned which will bring attention to UNO.

Castilow said Education Expo, sponsored by Cox Cable and the Knowledge Network, will be held during the spring at UNO. The event usually is held at Ak-Sar-Ben.

"While that is not a substitute (for Celebrate UNO), it is an event that will bring a large number of people to campus," she said.

Bill promotes teaching

By Elizabeth Merrill

The UNO Faculty Senate wants to promote higher teaching standards on campus.

In an attempt to do this, it unanimously passed legislation to "substantially enhance funding for the University Committee for the Advancement of Teaching and for the Center for Faculty Development."

The funding is to be "maintained at a level facilitating the ongoing development and maintenance of excellence in teaching," according to the proposal.

The legislation, drafted by the Committee on Professional Development, was amended from its original form, as references to comparing the funding to research dollars were disputed.

"We want to make it very clear that this request is not meant to siphon money from the Committee of Research," Sen. George Garrison said.

According to Committee Chair Edsel

Buchanan, the legislation, which would receive funding from the university budget, will ultimately benefit UNO students.

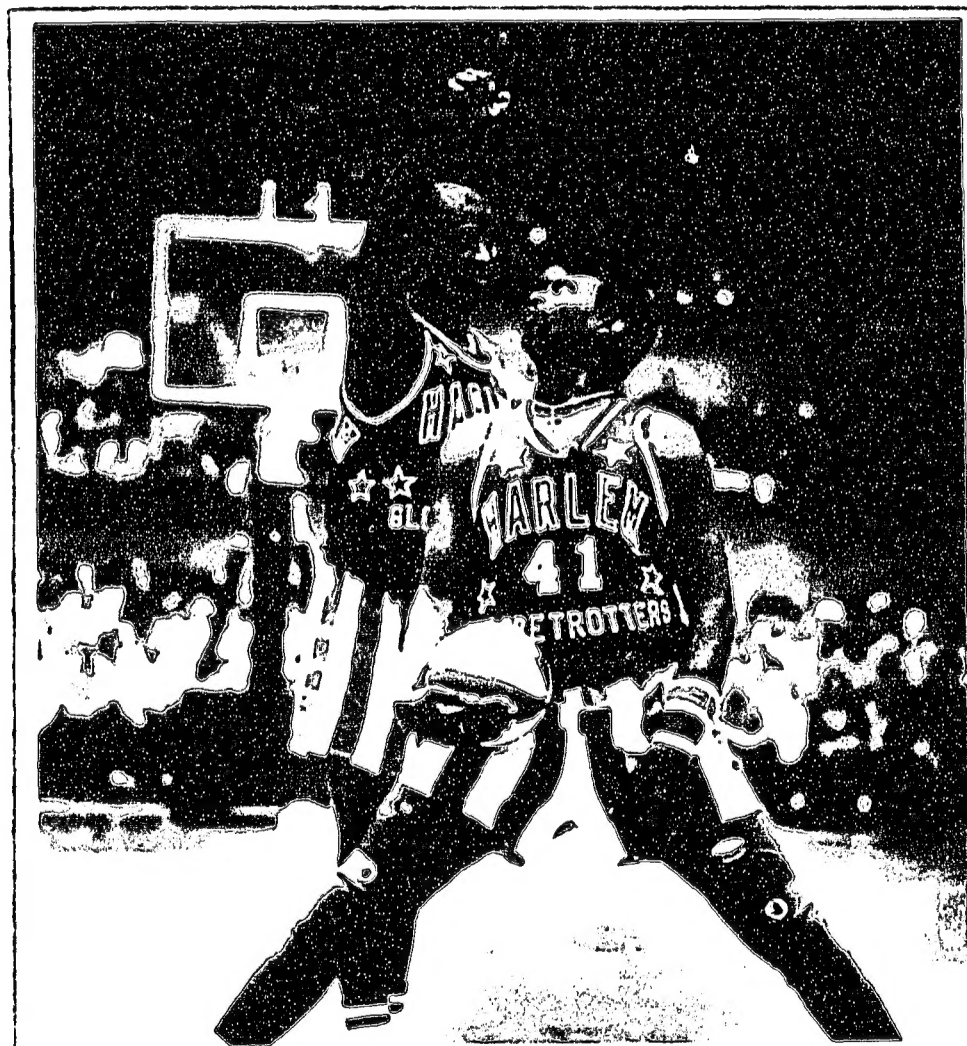

"We believe that students at UNO deserve the best possible teachers to deliver the best possible teaching," Buchanan said.

In other business, Fuad Abdullah, chair of the Academic and Curricular Affairs Committee, reported to the Senate on the status of the expedition of grade delivery to students.

At the Jan. 15 Senate meeting, Sen. Robert Carlson requested that the Senate speak to administration on the problem of students receiving their grade reports after walk-in registration.

According to Abdullah, the committee discussed the matter with Registrar Lew Conner Feb. 3.

Conner said although the majority of students should receive their grade reports before registration, those who did not could check their grades at the Registrar's office on registration days.

UNO administrators go back to teaching

By Greg Kozol

Larry Trussell and Joe L. Davis know it's never too late for a change.

Both Trussell and Davis resigned from high-level administrative positions at UNO last year and returned to teaching and research.

"When you're 54, getting an opportunity to change jobs and stay on the same campus doesn't come along every day," said Davis, who became chairman of the College of Education's counseling department last fall. "It is a new challenge."

Trussell said he agreed.

"Every administrator goes through periods when he wants to get back to teaching," he said.

Trussell, dean of the College of Business Administration (CBA) for 12 years, left that post Dec. 31. He currently administers international programs in CBA and is preparing for a return to the classroom in the fall.

Davis, former assistant vice chancellor for student development services, had spent about 19 years in student affairs administration. He teaches graduate-level counseling courses this semester.

Both "born-again-teachers" said they welcomed the change. "The difference is now I spend every day on what I want to work on rather than what I have to work on," Trussell said. "It's invigorating."

Trussell said he enjoyed serving as dean, but wanted to concentrate on new areas — particularly CBA's burgeoning international programs.

One of those programs is the A.I. Cuza University Project in Romania, which Trussell administers. UNO received a $193,000 grant from the United States Information Agency in August to assist the development of business programs at Cuza University in Iasi, Romania.

"Tom Goutierre (UNO's dean of international studies and programs) and I wrote the grant proposal," Trussell said. "When we got the grant in August, it felt like a starting point — a

Recipe for a nightmare: Consult the masses

Mix together equal parts of the insecurity, instability and immaturity of youth. Add traditional differences between men and women slowly. Stir in the concept that expressing feelings and confronting vulnerability is diametrically opposed to the usual tap-dance of life. Continue to blend ingredients until only minor difficulties remain. Toss in sex (sorry Mom and Dad, pre-marital sex is here to stay). Now, remove jealousy, gossip, infidelity and any hint of dishonesty. Gently, add the insanity of school, work, a social life and countless other endeavors.

If you're still with me, you now have the makings of a relationship in college. With all feelings? Is the typical regurgitation of a "gift" on Feb. 14, along with literally hundreds of thousands of other people, an expression of anything but a willingness to oblige society?

I want to believe that for the majority of people, Valentine's Day is simply another in a succession of loving, giving, compassionate days full of selfless care and concern for the ones we love. As much as I would like to embrace that illusion, my somewhat cynical mind won't let me.

Instead, I intuitively sense V-Day is a "break from the norm," a day to remember how we're supposed to treat each other.

I hope I'm wrong.

I hope my ability to judge the majority of society has been seriously clouded by my own lack of effectiveness in caring for others without "keeping score" or demanding something in return.

Unfortunately, a depressingly astronomical divorce rate tells me my intuition is closer to the truth than my hopes.

If you're interested in showing your significant other how much you love them, try this.

Bag the traditional Valentine's Day.

Don't stand anyone up — by all means, fulfill your commitments for the evening. Just save the "good stuff."

Take a rain check on your roses and conserve your energy for a day it's needed rather than expected.

Try May 3rd, for example, the Sunday before finals week begins.

Catch up on your studying (Yeah, right) and cook your "Valentine" a romantic, candle-light dinner for two when he or she needs it. The memory of your efforts will last far longer than whatever you've cooked up for this evening.

FEAR & LOATHING WITH JEFF HULTS

the intensity you can muster, bake at 100,000 degrees until Valentine's Day. Ta-da! You now have a nightmare. Serves two.

Although I've never seen this particular dish in Bon Appetit, variations of it have been served to me on many occasions. Mercifully, this year I won't be standing in line with 500 other guys at Victoria's Secret Thursday at 8:55 p.m. Clammy palms, furrowed brows, gut-wrenching indecision — I know the routine.

Relationships are about as easy as a double-back, inward pike, two and one-half, reverse twisting triple lindy.

Off the low dive.

What masochist thought of adding a special day to confront our inability to express our feelings? Could it have been the inventor of nitroglycerin?

I can't help but ask, do we really need to pin down Valentine's Day? Is an alarm clock on our calendars necessary to awaken our

Dear Editor:

In regard to Tuesday's editorial about "Chalk is for children ... take a real stand."

Why is it OK for the fraternities and sororities to deface the campus with their little chalk messages on the sidewalks, but it becomes a childish unclear message when the gay/lesbian/bisexual movement or the Independents do the same thing?

Even though the message was spelled incorrectly, it seems you understood it. Not to mention you may have been offended.

I agree these groups need to come forward with their message. However, being a lesbian myself, it was rather interesting to see the messages. I'm glad they were there.

Before you assume the masses are annoyed, perhaps you should consult them.

Editor's note: The editorial did not say it was OK for anyone to write on the sidewalks.

Truth not in columns

Dear Editor:

These days one can easily become disgusted with the Gateway. Rather than being a vehicle with which the student body can realize their efficacy as adults debating major issues affecting their own lives and the lives of their peers, it seems to be a vehicle with which a small group of pretentious, quasi-cerebral, wanna-be liberals and conservatives point out the weaknesses of each other's blatantly fallacious arguments.

To these people, whose names need not be mentioned since they are always signing some piece of trash as their brainchild of the week, I offer this unsolicited bit of advice: Grow up.

Although your abilities to express your opinions are quite unrefined, you have shown you are bright individuals with an interest in the plight of humans and desire to effect said plight for what you believe to be the better. Now simply quit getting excited and writing these foaming at the mouth commentaries and missing your own points.

I agree, the status quo is a sad state of affairs. But let me remind you the status quo exists largely because people think they know what is right, and deny the truth and what is right are so very hard to find. I have found the truth usually lies between, not within what you two are saying. So go back to your respective corners and really think matters through. And when you come out, come in search of the truth, not on a self-serving quest for audience share.

White men, wake up

Dear Editor:

In response to Gateway "special" fact #10 Tuesday, I must inform Kent Walton his column is boring. His subjects are unoriginal, his arguments are archaic, and his positions are extremely mediocre.

Take some lessons from Tara Muir. She always has stories, thoughtful arguments and a clearly defined focus. Although she may spark angered responses, I can at least credit her for having a spark.

Tara, I do not particularly care for your often abusive tone; more males might understand your opinions if you first proved you really don't hate men. However, not all men are blind Conserva-tyrants. Some actually appreciate your point of view.

I, for one, recognize my white male category is responsible for human reality today. Everyone has been trained to see the world like white men see it. The male interpretation of symbols and feelings has brainwashed every non-white Tyson out for the count . . .

The champ is reeling . . . he's down . . . eight, nine, maybe 10 years.

This week, former heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson was found guilty of raping a Miss Black America contestant.

Tyson will be transferring from the world's boxing stage to the Penal Boxing Club, trading rich man's gold for prison denims.

Before moving on to the larger issues brought up by the trial, a few words must be said about this case in particular. The up-close and personal look at Tyson displayed yet again a man in the limelight being unable to live up to the expectations that come with it.

Tyson lived like a spoiled child, and now he's paying for it. It is sad, however, to see someone of his immense talent in the ring be sidelined.

However, Tyson is proven guilty and deserves the punishment that is coming. I'm not apologizing for him, I'm just saying it's sad that it happened.

SPOTLIGHT BY PATRICK RUNGE

it's sad that it happened.

And, somehow, it seems a sad commentary on the state of the world when ESPN needs a legal correspondent.

I'm also glad that the accuser had the guts to come forward and do the right thing. I hope that her vindication will give other rape victims the courage to give their assailants the punishment they deserve.

Most of all, it proves superstars are vulnerable — all of Tyson's wealth and power won't keep him from being a guest of the state for a good, long time.

In that sense, it is a vindication of the maxim carved above the Supreme Court, "Equal Justice Under Law," words by which hopefully all trials are governed.

But, of course, the appeals will come. And I think they probably will be successful. Why, you ask? Because I think the jury shot the conviction down with their post-trial news conference.

At that conference, jurors said they "had doubts about both stories" but believed the accuser's over Tyson's. Now, let's think about this. The jurors said they had doubts about the accuser's testimony.

If that is so, how can they say they found Tyson guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt," the standard necessary in a criminal trial?

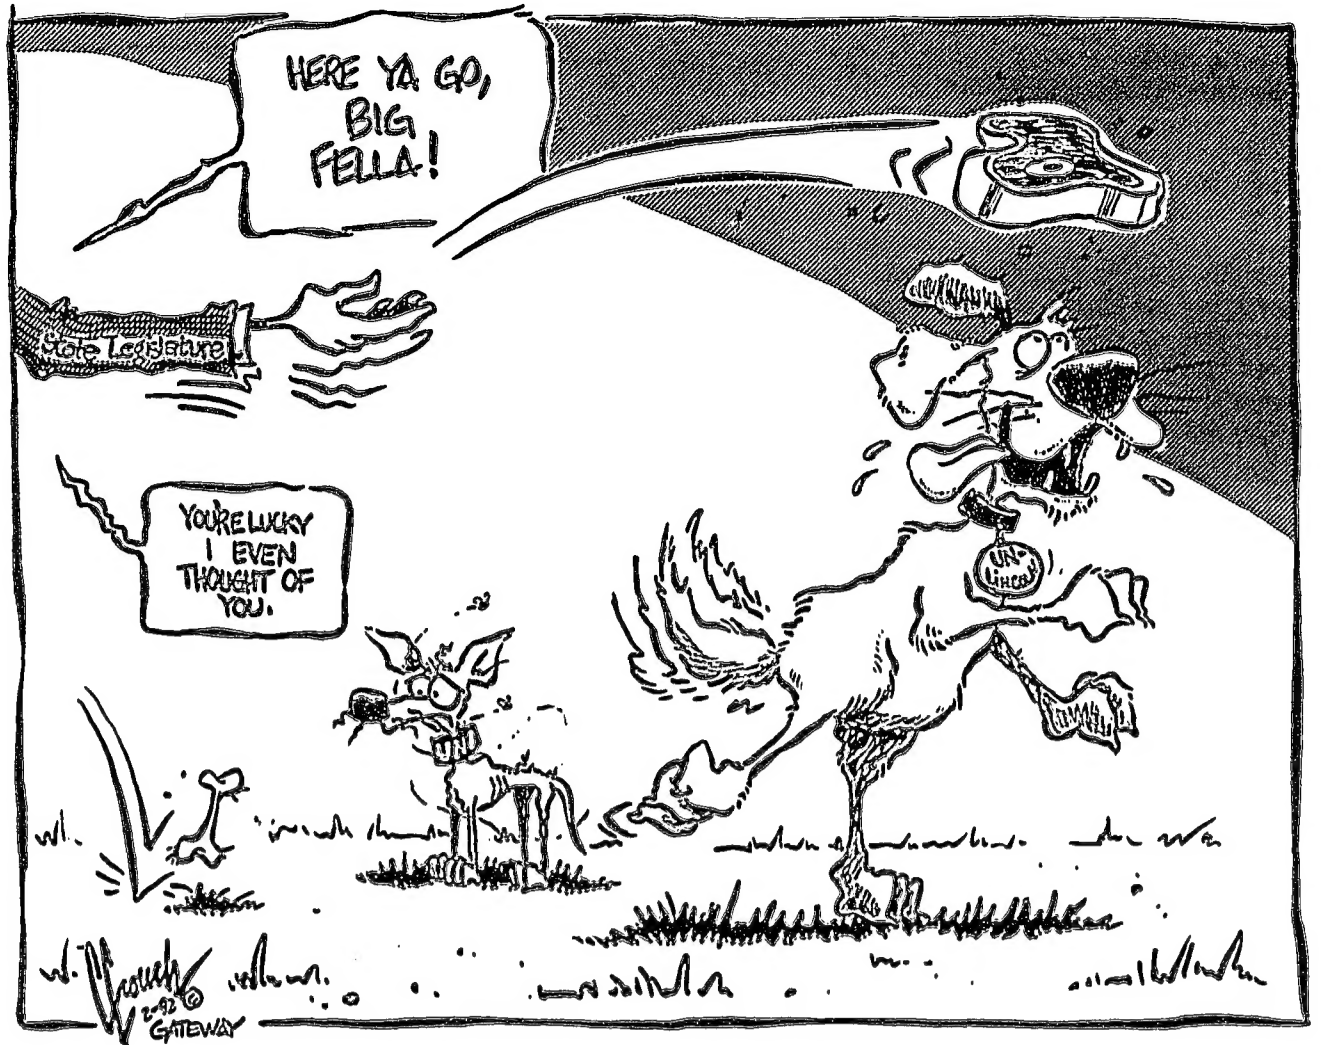

I'm sure Tyson's lawyers will be asking the same question to the appellate court judges.

The only judgment I can make is my frustration and contempt for the defense's claim that the accuser "should have known what was coming" from Tyson's earlier behavior.

With all due respect, that's bullshit.

It doesn't matter why she went up to his room. It doesn't matter if she wanted to have sex with Tyson up until the moment it began. Once she said "No," and he went on anyway, it's rape.

That's the only judgment I feel competent to make.

Kennedy gearing up for fall?

The pen is mightier than the sword. Who said that? Well, whoever said it, UNO Student Sen. Mike Kennedy seems to agree.

In fact, he has so much faith in the "pen" that he has utilized the written word quite often lately.

First, he submitted a proposal to the Student Senate for a letter of condemnation to be sent to University of Nebraska Board of Regents member Nancy O'Brien. Kennedy accused O'Brien of not defending UNO against Regent Charles Wilson of Lincoln.

Very noble, Sen. Kennedy. The only problem is O'Brien had no need to defend herself. Turns out Wilson was "not debating the appropriateness of housing but rather was questioning the process by which they would be approved," according to a letter O'Brien sent to Kennedy.

The funny part about the whole thing is Kennedy's letter was never approved by the Senate and thus was never sent to O'Brien. She read about it in the Gateway.

Kennedy apologized to O'Brien but told the Gateway, "I do regret naming (O'Brien.) However, I am glad that the Senate is finally taking an active stand on the dorm situation. We're taking the right action, not a hasty one."

The action he is referring to is, believe it or not, a second letter, this time addressed to all the regents, the governor and the state legislature. Once again, Kennedy is going to protest what he sees as ill treatment of UNO.

The letter said, in part, "At a time when UNO is facing numerous budget cuts, the Student Senate finds it ironic that $31 million can be found to build the Beadle Center in Lincoln."

After much debate, Kennedy said, "The students want this: they want dorms. The reason UNO doesn't get what it wants is because no one stands up and acts."

Luckily, calmer heads prevailed and the proposal was tabled until the next Senate meeting.

Unfortunately, even if the second letter doesn't get passed through the Senate and sent to its intended targets, Kennedy has accomplished his goal. He has gotten his name in the paper.

OK, it's only the Gateway, but it doesn't take much imagination to see Kennedy running for Student President/Regent next fall. And, if he keeps causing these kinds of controversy, many people will be familiar with his name.

We can only hope he keeps associating himself with hopeless flops like his first letter to Regent O'Brien, and the UNO students see him as the press-hog he is attempting to be.

Law-breakers relinquish rights others possess

Gateway columnist Pat Runge earns his own spot in this week's Letters/Opinions for his wack-a-doo attempt to refute "keeping the state executioner in business" (Gateway January 24).

Sen. Chambers, it seems, has persuaded a few Nebraskans, Runge included, into opposing capital punishment. Fortunately, Sen. Chambers has not had this same effect on the wise and virtuous 81 percent of us who do support the death penalty.

Capital punishment apparently involves deep passion in you, Runge, but not in the body politic. The inability of the greatest judicial system in history to finalize a sentence is the source of our deepest passion.

We are not dealing, as you would like us to believe, with the "government methodically killing its own citizens." First of all, you write of the "government" as though it is some strange monster lingering somewhere out there.

But, in truth, the government is — contrary to current convention — you and I, and the other 250 million human beings called Americans.

Second, once an individual breaks society's laws, he (or she) relinquishes those rights afforded him (or her). In our system, where innocence is presumed until guilt is proven, we further grant a host of special protection called "the rights of the accused."

Finally, it is through government that we empower the decision of life and death for us. The judicial branch is obligated to respond to the moral revulsion and contraction we experience when confronted with heinous crimes.

Moreover, since when has the United States, the great political experiment of western politications! Let England, France and Canada abolish capital punishment and let them see where that policy will lead them.

ANOTHER VIEW DEATH PENALTY

As a proponent of the death penalty, I do not "talk about its value as a deterrent to crime." Deterrence is nothing more than a smoke-screen argument which any thinking mind can easily dismiss. However, the bottom line is this: Should the eleven men on death row in Lincoln take the seat? If they do, we are guaranteed that they are permanently deterred from another vicious killing.

Runge stated, "I would like to lock someone like Joubert in a hole and leave him there." I hope that this was nothing but journalistic passion, for most folks would rather die than be locked in a hole and left there. Unless, of course, you're going to provide three tasty meals a day, some writing materials, a shower every so often, and, of course, engage in a conversation every now and then. These men receive more than some of our best citizens.

Runge, you stated, "society, especially the families of the victims, deserve to be protected from evil people like John Joubert."

Society and the families deserve to be protected, (but) not one more than the other.

Dodge Street access slows UNO traffic flow

By Lori Safranek

Cars wait to enter Dodge Street off the 67th Street exit.

—Ed Carlson

Which is greater — the distance from downtown Omaha to west Omaha or the distance from UNO's parking lots to Dodge Street?

No, this isn't an algebra test, but UNO Student President/Regent Mike Farquhar would like to know why it takes just as long to travel both distances.

"We live in a 20-minute city, and it takes us 15 minutes to get off campus," he said. A 20-minute city means that a driver can get from downtown to west Omaha in 20 minutes.

Farquhar said he has heard students in his classes complaining about the traffic problem.

"I've never had the types of problems I've had recently getting off and on campus," he said.

Charles Swank, manager of campus security, said he hasn't received any specific complaints, but that he was aware there have been problems.

"Our problem with traffic flow is that we've basically got three entrance/exit areas, and two of these are on Dodge Street," he said. "We're just located on, I think anyway, the major artery of the city."

Swank said university officials have discussed the traffic problem with City of Omaha planning officials, who said about 60,000 vehicles travel Dodge Street daily. About 1,100 vehicles leave UNO at peak times, Swank said.

One solution to UNO's traffic problem would be to allow longer green lights for those cars exiting UNO on to Dodge Street.

"Because of the tremendous amount of traffic on Dodge Street, they aren't able to give us any more green light time," Swank said.

"If they change it for us, they're just going to create even more traffic back-ups on Dodge Street," he said.

Mike Gorman, City of Omaha traffic engineer, said the city is aware of UNO's problems, but he doesn't believe there is a solution.

"I don't know how much more we can do, short of reconstruction," Gorman said. "It's a tough situation. It's a big school and really there's only two ways to get on or off Dodge Street."

Traffic can leave UNO at 60th Street and at 67th Street, Gorman said. The double-lane left turn at 67th Street seems to work well, he said.

"That gets people out pretty well," Gorman said.

Gorman said while he realizes there is a problem, he is not surprised.

"It's not that unusual for a set-up like that where people are coming and going," he said. "There's going to be problems. It's almost impossible to design something that works."

Farquhar said the problem might be alleviated if more people parked at Ak-Sar-Ben and rode the shuttle.

Swank said he didn't feel parking was the cause of the traffic flow problem, but said parking at Ak-Sar-Ben might alleviate the problem.

"It would help in the sense that there would be fewer cars moving off campus," he said.

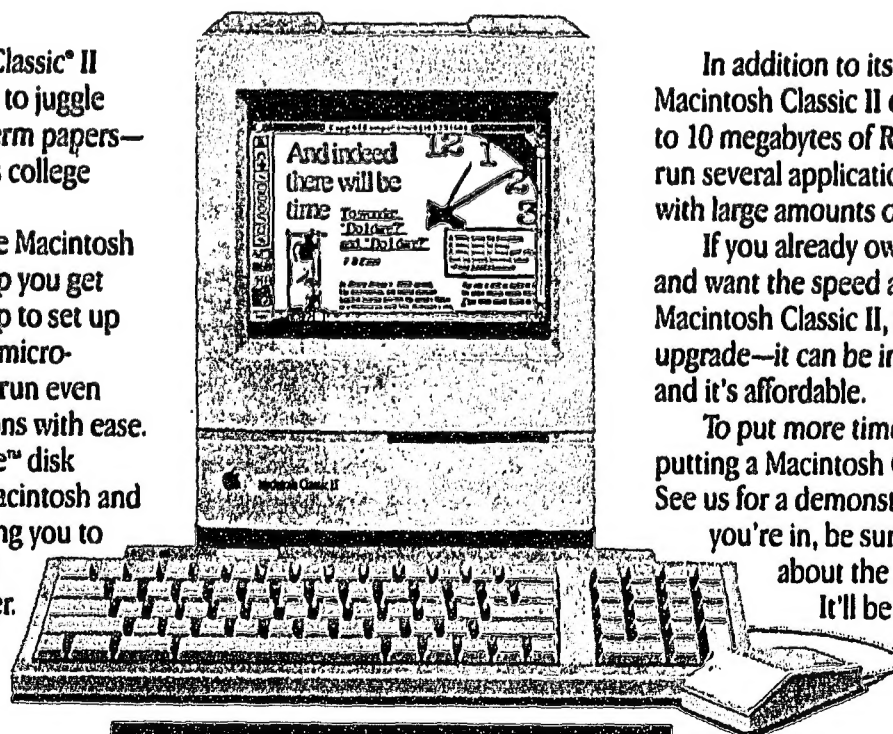

"We live in a 20-minute city, and it takes us 15 minutes to get off campus."

Real world of go-go bars

Dear Editor:

Tara Muir, I would like to invite you to be my guest for an evening of debauchery. I promise to show you the real world of go-go bars. The only requirement is you wear a male disguise. I guarantee you by the end of the evening, you will have done some pretty serious fondling and more; especially if you bring along a couple hundred bucks and a couple grams of your favorite powder. And all this without, I assure you, being jumped on by any security guys.

Do you think I'm exaggerating? I am not. I was a bouncer in a go-go bar for about three years. I'm not proud of it. Tara, do you honestly believe "Fifi" is telling the whole truth about her job?

I realize that not all dancers fit the stereotype, but I bet you all of them wouldn't be there at all if they were concerned about the job environment. And what is the job environment? Sex, drugs, prostitution, private parties, motorcycle gangs, crime, etc.

I bet you a shot at The Bittersweet "Fifi" can be bought if the price is right; preferably by the older, married regular type she refers to. Sorry, "Fifi," you sound like a nice girl, but I probably know you. In fact, I'm pretty sure I know you. And you, Tara, wake up and tip that table dancer before she realizes why her dancing isn't giving you a boner.

Wayne's World

By Eric Johnson

"Wayne's World," "Wayne's World," movie time, excellent! Rrr. Rrr. Rrr. That's right — it's "Wayne's World" opening nationwide Friday on the big screen.

Wayne (Mike Myers) and Garth (Dana Carvey), from TV's "Saturday Night Live," pull out all the stops in their outrageous adventures around the Chicago area in this film. Actually it's Aurora, but the guys also take a road trip to Milwaukee and all kinds of other cool places.

While the boys don't destroy their hometown like the Blues Brothers, they take plenty of jabs at American pop culture as it exists today. One of the best skits is about sponsorship and how stars may be against it, but still use it as a source of income or support.

It's a movie about quests. One of these is Wayne's quest for a new girlfriend and his dream guitar, a white Fender Strat. Meanwhile, Garth also has his eyes on a waitress at Stan Mikita's doughnut shop, but doesn't seem to have the nerve to go after what he wants.

Movie Review

What this movie does in a broader sense is bring the boys out of the basement. We get to meet the people they hang out with and get a close glimpse of Wayne's and Garth's relationship and lives. It's the roving camera work that makes this movie effective.

At times, Garth will call you aside and make some observations that are secrets. It's like we are Wayne's and Garth's best buddies from the beginning — like we went to high school with them and have known them for years.

Once we're in, the guys start showin' off and the laughs don't stop. It's one gag right after another. One of the best things is Garth's car, a blue Pacer with flames on the side. Then we go for a ride and everyone lip-synchs along to Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody." Of course, you have to do a little head-banging when the solo comes up. It wouldn't be right otherwise.

Garth plays more of a major role in the film than most people would think. His array of quirky inventions, like his mega-volt stun gun, really make his personality flesh out. He's more than Wayne's cohort on public access; he's an individual with real thoughts.

Rob Lowe plays a greedy business shark who signs the boys up and takes "Wayne's World" big time. He also puts some moves on Wayne's new squeeze.

Ed O'Neil, better known as Al Bundy on TV's "Married with Children," delivers a Bundy-like performance as the manager of Mikita's. He never leaves. This guy is working 24 hours a day, every day. Some life.

Alice Cooper makes a cameo appearance as himself. He informs Wayne and Garth all about the history of Milwaukee while still in makeup. It's something to be seen and heard.

The film has three endings in all, the best of which is definitely the "Scooby-Doo" ending. I can't tell you what it's about without giving it away, but it's something I hadn't seen since the last time I watched cartoons.

Lorne Michaels of "Saturday Night Live" produced and directed the film. It was written by Mike Myers with help from Bonnie and Terry Turner, and shows Myers' talent at comedy.

Oscar nomination predictions

By Elizabeth Tape

On Feb. 19, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will present its nominations for this year's Academy Awards.

For the first time ever, the Gateway is going out on a limb to predict the nominees for some of the major categories.

I think the films that will be nominated for many categories include "Bugsy," "JFK," "Silence of the Lambs," "Grand Canyon," "Cape Fear," "Prince of Tides" and "The Fisher King."

I should point out there are many eligible films I haven't seen, including "At Play in the Fields of the Lord," "Barton Fink," "The Black Robe," "Boyz 'N the Hood," "Jungle Fever," "Life is Sweet," "Meeting Venus" and "Naked Lunch."

Therefore, I leaned on my film festival mate from Rochester, N.Y., Mark Sample, to help me out.

The asterisks indicate what many would consider as leading roles, but what my intuition tells me will be nominated in this category.

Best Supporting Actress

Juliette Lewis in "Cape Fear"
Mercedes Ruehl in "The Fisher King"
Kate Nelligan in "Frankie and Johnny" or "Prince of Tides"

Mary McDonnell in "Grand Canyon"
Diane Ladd in "Rambling Rose"

Best Supporting Actor

Anthony Hopkins in "Silence of the Lambs"*

Kevin Kline in "Grand Canyon" or "Soapdish"

Jack Palance in "City Slickers"
Steven Hill in "Billy Bathgate"
Joe Pesci in "JFK"

Best Actress

Bette Midler in "For the Boys"
Annette Bening in "Bugsy"
Jodie Foster in "Silence of the Lambs"
Susan Sarandon in "Thelma and Louise"
Geena Davis in "Thelma and Louise"
Michelle Pfeiffer in "Frankie and Johnny"

Best Actor

William Hurt in "The Doctor"

Jonathan Demme in "Silence of the Lambs"

Terry Gilliam in "The Fisher King"

Best Film

"Grand Canyon"
"JFK"
"Bugsy"
"Silence of the Lambs"
"Beauty and the Beast"
"Prince of Tides"
"The Fisher King"
"The Doctor"

For The Best Foreign Film category, nations nominate their choices.

It's interesting that, even though the German film, "Europa, Europa," a film directed by Polish screenwriter Agnieszka Holland about a young man escaping from the Nazis, has won numerous awards, it was not submitted by the German selection committee. This decision has been questioned by many experts in the field.

A few other mentions, for song, it's likely that "Beauty and the Beast," "For the Boys" and "The Commitments" will be nominated.

"Terminator II," "The Rocketeer," "Star Trek VI," and "Backdraft" likely will be honored for visual effects. And "Beauty and the Beast," in addition to musically based nominations, probably will be recognized for its excellence in animation.

Please look for the Gateway's Fourth (almost-annual) Oscar Contest, coming up in a few weeks.

The Academy Awards will be announced on March 30.

Popular Chicago band coming to Old Market

by Eric Johnson

The Bad Examples are touted as the best rock band in Chicago. The band has been around since 1987, although the current members got together in the summer of 1990.

Featuring Ralph Covert on lead vocals and rhythm guitar, Terry Wathen on drums, John Welch on lead guitar and Tom "Pickles"

Band Focus

Wiekarski on bass, the band pumps out pop rock in the fashion of Squeeze. It's guitar-driven pop with an added dose of emotion on the slower songs.

While still unknown in most parts of this country, the Bad Examples are doing great in Europe. In fact, the band has just returned from a 10-day trek across that continent and now they are focusing on America.

The Bad Examples hit the club circuit a little over a year ago. They already have 200 shows and 3,000 miles under their belts from last year, and the totals could be even bigger in 1992.

The band is now touring in support of their CD, "Bad Is Beautiful." It's a collection of slow acoustic ballads and some faster-moving pop rockers. It's distributed by Waterdog Records.

"Not Dead Yet" is the first track on the CD and a lot of people have heard it. By another band, that is. It was Styx's last big single to climb the charts.

The Bad Examples wrote the song and Styx liked it.

The original version isn't too far from the Styx track. The song is the same, only this band does it with a little more acoustic feel.

"Rubber Cement Man" is a rockabilly tune that leaves the lyrics up to interpretation.

The wailing wah guitar work is what really gets this song going and gives it the juice to keep moving. It's short, hard rockin', and sweet.

"Ashes of My Heart" is a slower song that covers the ground of trying to rekindle a romantic spark. As a lot of people know, it isn't always that easy and that's the case here. The chorus is filled nicely with some thick harmonies.

"From Ragtime to Rags" is the best ballad on the CD. It's a mellow groove with some mandolin backing to give it a different flavor. It's an emotional outpouring of sorts — the idea of wanting someone so badly, but never getting the chance to be lovers.

There is some true emotion in the lyrics as well as the vocals.

Overall, The Bad Examples do a good job of covering the pop territory. The CD gets a little slow toward the end, though, when some of the slower songs start piling up into one another.

Otherwise, these guys have a chance of working their way up in the business with some breaks.

The Bad Examples are kicking off their five-week American tour in Omaha. They will appear at the Howard Street Tavern on Feb. 18. Tickets are $2.

Jazz festival to feature famous composer

by Amy Miller

For 19 years, some of the greatest names in jazz have performed at UNO, including Doc Severinsen, Winton Marsalis and Phil Woods.

Beginning Friday, a new decade of great jazz will begin with the 20th Annual Great Plains Jazz Festival in the Student Center ballroom. The two-day festival, hosted by UNO's music department, will feature Frank Mantooth, an internationally renowned composer.

The festival will consist of more than 15 junior and senior high school jazz bands from Nebraska and Iowa, as well as jazz and show choirs and jazz combos, said James Saker, UNO associate professor of music.

"The festival is always a major event in this area," Saker said.

The bands will not only be involved in various competitions, but the students also will take part in workshops, he said.

"The format stayed the same for the most part, but now instead of just competing, they will now attend workshops to better improve their skills," Saker said.

Mantooth and various jazz teachers will teach the workshops, he said.

In addition to two critically acclaimed albums, Mantooth has composed nearly 100 works for combo and jazz ensembles, Saker said. Included in these have been works commissioned by Severinsen, Ramsey Lewis, Bobby Shew, Pete Christlieb, Louis Bellson and The Army Blues.

As part of the festival, outstanding student musicians will be cited for their performances and students from each school who display outstanding achievement will receive talent citations.

Two high school seniors will receive music scholarships to attend UNO and one UNO student will receive a $100 scholarship to attend a jazz camp this summer.

Friday's activities will be from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m., and Saturday's activities begin at 9:30 a.m.

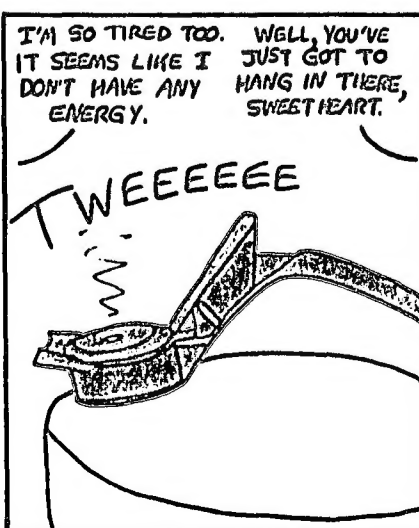

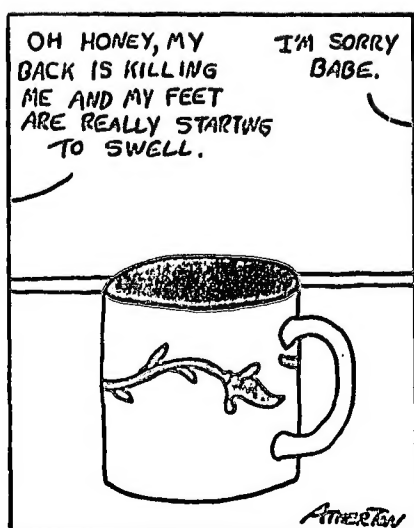

The competitions and workshops are free to the public.

"Anybody can come and take part in these events," Saker said.

Saturday's finale concert begins at 7:30 p.m. The finale will feature the outstanding junior or senior high school jazz ensemble as selected by the judges during the competitions, Saker said. The concert also will include a performance by a jazz combo and the UNO jazz band, he said.

Tickets for the finale concert are $5 and will be available at the door. Tickets are also available at Schmitt's Music (West Dodge Street location) and Joe Voda's Drum City.

My Funny Valentine

Condom Caper one of activities for V-Day

By Tim Rohwer

From the lighter side of a "Condom Caper" to the much more serious issue of AIDS, UNO will host several Valentine's Day-related events Friday dealing with sexual relationships and various lifestyle options.

"The purpose of these events is to make people aware of the dangers of sexually transmitted diseases," said Gloria Rial, director of UNO's Women's Resource Center, one of the organizations sponsoring the events.

"We can't ignore the fact that AIDS is an epidemic," she said. "Eighty percent of college students nationwide are sexually active and one in every 500 students has tested positive for the HIV virus."

"Students have to know what the risks are and how to protect themselves. We're not proposing one lifestyle over another, but we want to show different options. Naturally, celibacy is the safest," Rial said.

The events include lectures, video presentations and other informative activities, she said.

The majority of the events will be held at the Student Center octagon from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Rial said.

The organizations and their scheduled times at the octagon include:

♥ The Douglas County Health Department from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

♥ The Nebraska AIDS Project from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m.

♥ UNO Health Services from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The American Red Cross from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

♥ The United Methodist Community Center from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

♥ The Lutheran Family Services from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

♥ Planned Parenthood from 1:30 p.m. to 2:30 p.m.

♥ University of Nebraska Medical Center from 2:30 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Other events include:

♥ Brown-bag lunch lecture, "Negotiating Safer Sex," from 11 a.m. to noon in the Student Center State Room.

♥ Panel discussion on male and female relationships from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Student Center Gallery Room.

♥ "Condom Caper" scavenger hunt in the Pep Bowl at 11:45 a.m.

UNO couples work together

By Lori Safranek

Many married couples will give each other a Valentine's Day card Friday morning, kiss each other good-bye and head to their separate jobs.

Couples like Carolyn and Alfred Crawford will walk out the door, get into the same car and go to the same building — UNO.

Alfred, coordinator of special projects in UNO's Educational and Student Services department, has worked at UNO for 14 years and Carolyn, a staff secretary, has worked at the university for 10 years.

Carolyn said she enjoys working at the same place as her husband.

"I think as far as a marriage it's fun because you can hear the problems and relate to them," she said. "I think part of a marriage is understanding each other. When he has a hard day, I have a hard day."

Alfred said he doesn't see negative or positive effects.

"From one point of view, I see more of her than I normally would," he said. "Does it give us anything other than that? Not really."

He said working together for 10 years has created a pattern in the couple's life.

"If I come to work and Carolyn's not working that day, it's really strange," he said. "It's really strange to go home alone."

The Crawfords said they seldom eat lunch together, since they see each other at home. Both said they see no negative effects of working together.

"You can tell we still love each other even though we've done this for 10 years," Alfred said.

Nancy and David Castilow have been married only since July, but they've worked together at UNO for 14 years.

David, director of business services at UNO, has worked at UNO for 18 years, and Nancy has worked at UNO for 14.

Both said they have a hard-and-fast rule which makes working together easier.

"We have this one rule that we leave work at work," David said.

"We try and separate our business and professional and our personal lives as much as possible," Nancy said. "I think it's the best way."

The Castilows also said they have experienced no problems from working together.

"I've never seen a problem that has arisen from both of us working here," Nancy said. She said she finds benefits from the situation.

"I think it gives you a perspective on where your spouse is coming from on certain things," she said. "I would say the biggest benefit is you understand the working environment your spouse is in and some of the pressures. You have a common background you're coming from."

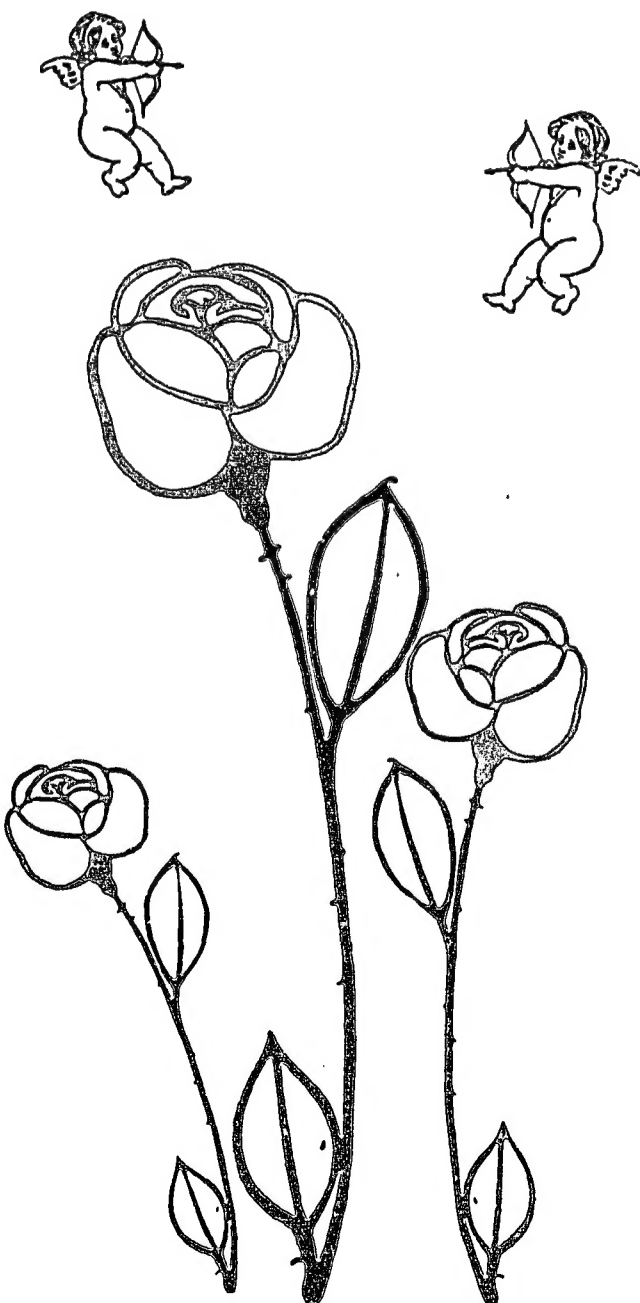

Terry Neuhaus, UNO employment manager, said there are no exact counts, but many married couples work together at UNO.

Gateway unsentimental research, based on names and addresses in the campus phone directory, found about 34 married couples working here.

"Because of the kind of organization we are, we can provide a wide variety of positions," Neuhaus said. "If one spouse enjoys the atmosphere, the other spouse can find a position here."

The only rules about spouses working together is that one spouse cannot supervise the other, Neuhaus said. She said she hasn't heard of any problems resulting from couples working together at UNO.

"Of the couples I know who are married and work here together, I think it's been a positive experience," she said.

Half a millenium of Latin American Jews

By Tim Rohwer

Did you know the first member of Christopher Columbus' crew to set foot in the New World, Luis de Torres, was of Jewish descent?

Did you also know the man who financed the trip, Luis de Santangel, was Jewish?

These and other facts concerning Spanish Jews and their expulsion to Latin America is the focus of an exhibit at Omaha's Jewish Community Center (JCC).

The exhibit, "Voyages to Freedom: 500 Years of Jewish Life in Latin America and the Caribbean" commemorates the 500th anniversary of Spanish Jews' expulsion from Spain in 1492, said Kenneth Libo, curator of American Jewish History at New York City's Museum of Jewish Heritage.

"This is a very important subject because there were many people in Spain of Jewish descent," Libo said. "The year 1492 was doubly important for Jews because it was not only the year Columbus sailed to the New World, but also Jews were forced to leave after living there for eight centuries."

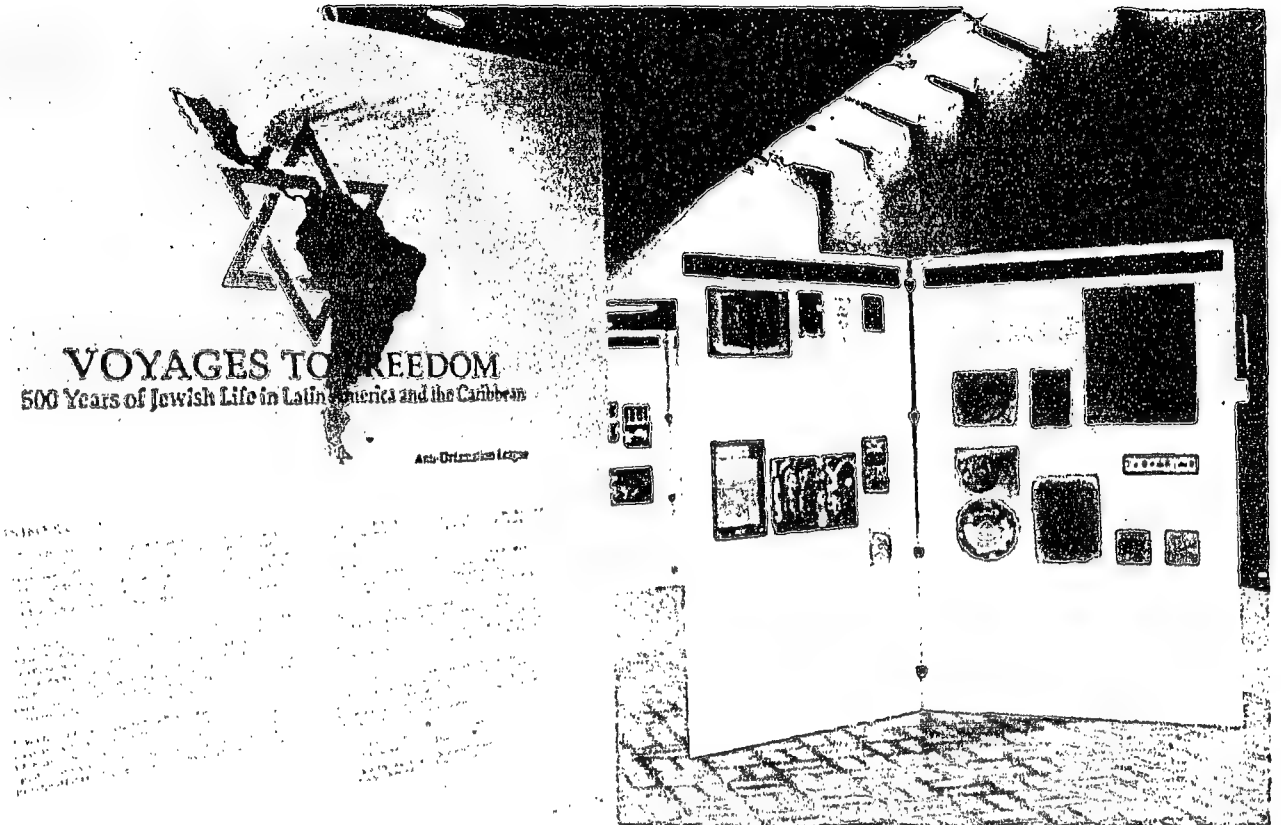

Libo said Jews were forced to leave after the Christian royal couple, Ferdinand and Isabella, captured the last Moslem stronghold in early 1492.

Previously, under Christian and Moslem rule, Jews with politically and economically important in Spain, he said.

"Jews developed important nautical and astrological instruments. They were outstanding map-makers. Columbus could never have sailed if it wasn't for what the Jews invented."

"But once the Moslems lost their last bastion in March of 1492, Jews were considered no longer useful, and, in fact, a threat. Ferdinand and Isabella wanted a single religion in Spain. The idea of not accepting Christianity was a very dangerous idea for Jews," Libo said.

Jews continued to suffer religious persecution in the New World in the 1500s. In the early 1600s, Jews living in Brazil were able to practice their religion more openly after the

A passage in time . . . The exhibit marks the 500th anniversary of the expulsion of Jews from Spain.

Dutch captured part of that country from the Portuguese, Libo said.

"The Dutch were sympathetic to the Jews because they themselves had broken away from Spanish rule," he said.

The highest number of Jews that immigrated to Latin America came during World War II. Today, one out of every 24 persons living there is of Jewish descent, he said.

The exhibit is a collection of 230 images collected from 50 sites in Latin America, the Caribbean, Europe, Israel and the United States.

The exhibit is on display at the Jewish Community Center, 333 S. 132 St., through Feb. 27.

launching pad for more grants.

"I said, 'This is what I really want to do.' It really stimulated me to make a change."

Trussell said expanding CBA's international programs has become his top project since he left the dean's office.

"At first glance, one would say, 'What are all those faculty members doing traveling all over the world?'" he said. "But so many businesses, even in Omaha, do business internationally. In international business, there are all kinds of problems, just from an accounting perspective."

"By sending faculty overseas, we're better able to teach students about problems in accounting, as well as finance, management and economics."

Davis said his time has been divided between administering the counseling department, teaching graduate courses and doing research.

Has he noticed any changes in the classroom?

"Only that I haven't kept up," Davis said. "And there are a greater number of women students than years ago."

"But I really find the students and the interaction invigorating. I needed new opportunities."

Besides teaching, Davis is working on a grant proposal to create a specialty program in rehabilitation counseling and doing research on alcohol consumption by college students.

His career change has been a learning experience, he said.

"I've made some mistakes," he said. "Things like scheduling two classes at the same time. But it's a great opportunity."

Trussell, who will visit a university in Germany this spring, said he sometimes also feels more like a student than an administrator or teacher.

"I'm taking a class in German," he said. "This is all new to me."

And both disagreed their new positions should be considered a step down in status from their previous administrative posts.

"Externally, people were a bit puzzled when I made the switch," Trussell said. "But people at the university understand. They offered congratulations."

"Most people see the faculty member as the most prestigious part of the university," Davis said. "Most see it as a promotion. I was surprised by that. I shouldn't have been."

15 km walk raises money for multiple sclerosis

Volunteers in Omaha, Lincoln and Grand Island will walk 15 kilometers in the 1992 Super Cities Walk April 5 to help fight multiple sclerosis.

The walk starts at 9 a.m. in all three cities. John Knicely, sports reporter for television station KETV, will lead the walk in Omaha. The Omaha walk will cover four city parks, the Old Market area, downtown and residential neighborhoods.

Walkers in Lincoln will visit the Folsom Children's Zoo along with residential areas, city parks and downtown. The route in Grand Island goes through four city parks and gives walkers the option of visiting the Grand Isle Heritage Zoo in Stolley Park.

All routes will provide a snack at the beginning, four water stops, and a lunch at the end.

Mav wrestlers learn from Division I foes

By Owen Hoevel

—Eric Francis

Dan Radlk, left, is ranked No. 4 in the 177-pound weight class in the NCAA Division II ratings.

Imagine the UNO men's basketball team playing in the Final Four tournament with teams like Duke, Indiana and Oklahoma State. Well, that is exactly what happened to the UNO wrestlers last weekend at the Cliff Keen National Dual Championships in Ann Arbor, Mich.

The championships displayed 11 of the top Division I teams in the nation including Iowa, Iowa State and Penn State. The innovative tournament, sponsored by the National Wrestling Coaches Association (NWCA), matched teams in a dual-style format rather than the orthodox individual style.

In the traditional tournament, a wrestler advances through the meet on his own victories and losses. In the dual style two teams are matched in a dual and then advance through the bracket as a team.

The Mavs were the only Division II team to participate in the tournament. UNO was invited to the duals because of last year's national championship. But as Coach Mike Denney was quick to explain, this year's team is much different from last year's.

"We lost five senior All-Americans from last year, and now have more freshman starters than we've had in years," he said.

Denney brought four of the five seniors from last year's squad as coaches for the trip.

The team's youth showed as the Mavs went 0-3 for the tournament. Although the weekend was filled with losses, it was a productive one for the inexperienced group.

"Sometimes a defeat can be a real gift," Denney said. "If used in the right way, it could be a great experience."

The educational weekend began on Saturday for the Mavs, when they lost 35-6 to eighth-seeded Purdue.

"The score was misleading," Denney said. "We had some close matches that could have gone either way."

The only two victories for the Mavs were at 126 pounds, where Bill Glenn won an 8-4 decision, and at 190 pounds, with Pat Kelly's 9-5 win.

The wrestling lecture continued later that night when the

Those winter blahs

How's it going, sports fans? I've been trying all week to think of something really good to write about today, and I've actually had a few pretty good ideas.

One of my ideas was to write something about the Mav wrestlers taking on the Division I boys last weekend. Another was to write about the Metro swimming championships that start today. My other option was to do another blurb about the Winter Olympics.

Yes, my options were wide open, or at least they seemed that way when I went to bed Tuesday night. But when I woke up Wednesday morning, all that I could think about was that infernal white stuff all over the ground. Snow, snow, snow. I HATE SNOW!!! I know it's the middle of February and it's supposed to snow, but that doesn't mean I have to like it.

let's face it — neither of these sports is incredibly exciting to watch. Besides, whenever I go to a swim meet anymore I inevitably see some little gangly kid, whose ass I used to whip on a regular basis when I was still swimming, win every event he swims. God, that's depressing.

I guess if you're really desperate for a winter sport to participate in during the winter in the Midwest you could always go skiing at Crescent... NOT!!!

In the summer, on the other hand, Omaha is teeming with sporting events. These are not only to watch, but to participate in as well.

To start the summer off, we have the College World Series and, of course, the awesome, staying-in-Omaha Royals playing in the newly renovated Rosenblatt stadium, no less.

The summer also means water skiing at Beaver Lake, Wakonda Lake, Criss Lake, or Lake Manawa. If you aren't a member or property owner, or at least a friend of a member or property owner at one of these places, you must live in a closet.

And, of course, it wouldn't be summer in Omaha if softballs weren't flying through the air. Omaha is the softball capitol of the world, or something, isn't it? I think there's some kind of city ordinance that everyone in the Omaha area must play on at least one softball team. So if you didn't play last year, you had better sign up or the softball police will hunt you down.

And let's not forget sand volleyball. How can you? You can't drive three blocks without seeing a bar with a volleyball court or two stuck out the back.

Speaking of volleyball, I'm trying to put together a team for this summer. Anyone who might be interested in playing can leave me a message at the Gateway. People who suck at it or don't drink beer need not bother.

Now I've probably made all you other summer people out there even more depressed. Well, buck up, campers, we've only got three more months to go.

YIKES!!!

SPORTS STUFF BY CRAIG SIEDLIK

A couple of weeks ago I was wearing shorts and washing my car. Now I'm scraping the ice off my windshield again.

My girlfriend just bought me a new golf bag for my birthday (thanks again, Anna), and I was all set to go break it in this weekend, but it's kind of hard to find a little white ball in a snow drift. This really sucks!

I've never really been a big fan of the winter. Even when I was little the only reason I would go sledding was to hurl snowballs at the icky girls.

I mean, let's face it, there just isn't much to do as far as sports go in Nebraska during the winter months. Oh, sure, there's 50-cent beer night at the Lancers and Racers, but those don't really count because they're indoors.

The only reason basketball and hockey teams play during the winter is because everyone who has a brain would rather be sitting outside basking in the sun when it's nice out and watching a baseball game.

Then there's swimming and wrestling, but

Mavs of the Week

Sandy Skradski

Sandy Skradski earned the North Central Conference (NCC) women's Basketball Player of the Week honor for her efforts against Augustana and South Dakota State last weekend. The junior from Omaha Gross scored 23 points and pulled down 16 rebounds against Augustana. In the Lady Mavs' 62-53 victory over South Dakota State, Skradski scored 19 points and grabbed 23 rebounds, two shy of the NCC record and one short of the UNO record.

Ron Walker

Ron Walker had two consecutive career-high scoring efforts last weekend. The 5-foot-9 Walker had 19 points in a losing effort against Augustana last Friday. Against South Dakota State, in a regionally televised game, the junior from Wichita, Kan., scored 20 points. In both games, all of Walker's points were scored in the second half. Walker's 10.8 point-per-game average is second to teammate Phil Cartwright's.

From Wrestling, page 13

Mavs were manhandled 42-5 by Michigan. The Wolverines were the sixth seed in the tournament and presently are ranked in the Division I Top Ten.

The only bright spot for the Mavs was Kelly's 21-5 technical fall at 190 pounds. Kelly turned in UNO's best performance, going 2-1 for the weekend.

After battling two quality Division I opponents, the Mavs seemed to catch a break when matched against Northern Montana, last year's NAIA National Champions.

In the dual, both teams traded victories all the way to the heavyweight division, where Dan Carriker lost a 3-2 decision. This gave Northern Montana a 21-18 victory. The dual was highlighted by Glenn's 15-6 major decision at 126 pounds and Dan Radik's 15-0 technical fall at 177 pounds.

The tough effort given by the Mavs again was scarred because of the forfeiture of the 118-pound weight class.

Denney said a wrestler at the 118-pound weight could have given the Mavs a tie or even a win.

"It's lost a lot of duals for us this year," he said.

Denney said the dual format didn't help his team.

"We're not a great dual team this year, but we are a much better tournament team."

The best two performances on paper were turned in by Glenn and Kelly, who both went an impressive 2-1 in the tournament. Glenn's only loss was a 10-3 decision to his opponent from Michigan. Kelly improved his record to 12-2 overall. His only loss was a close 13-12 match to a Northern Montana wrestler.

Although the stat sheet showed losses for the rest of the team, Denney said it was a beneficial experience for everyone.

"I think we gained some very positive experiences against some really tough competition," Denney said. "It will really prepare us for the conference and national tournaments."

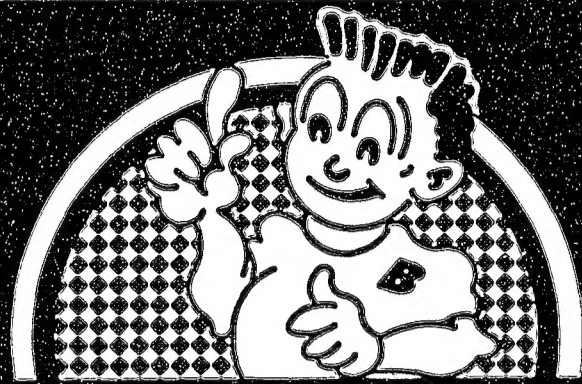

Denney said he is hoping his team peaks at the right time.

The beginning of the season's end starts Friday, when the Mavs host Central Missouri State and North Central Conference rival Augustana in a triangular dual.

In a triangular dual, two mats are used and all three teams wrestle simultaneously.

The Mavs then will travel to Fargo, N.D., Feb. 22 for the North Central Conference Tournament, which is a qualifying tournament for the March 6-7 NCAA Division II National Tournament in Greeley, Colo.

Cheapskates locked out

HIRAM, Ohio (CPS) — A small liberal arts college has come up with a plan to put an end to delinquent bill-payers.

Students with overdue tuition bills have been locked out of their dormitory rooms at Hiram College.

Last fall, the school warned students of the move after estimating unpaid bills totaled hundreds of thousands of dollars. When students returned this year, the locks on their dorm rooms had been changed. To get new keys, students had to work out payment plans with school officials.

Pulling your hair out?

HOUSTON (CPS) — The next time you want to pull your hair out, you might check in with Dr. Suzan Streichenwein.

Streichenwein, an assistant professor of psychiatry at Baylor College of Medicine, is an expert on trichotillomania, or the irresistible impulse to pull out one's own hair.

She says the disorder may be caused by a neuro-chemical imbalance which can be controlled with medication, diet and behavior modification.

The bizarre disorder affects millions of Americans, and its victims are mostly women, she said. The compulsion, often beginning in childhood and continuing a lifetime, can cause social withdrawal in extreme cases.

Those who suffer trichotillomania will carefully examine the hair to be plucked, making a choice because of texture, color and condition.

The impulse to pull hair, which can include eyebrows, eyelashes and pubic hair, can be brought on by stress, caffeine, sugar, chocolate or premenstrual syndrome. There is usually a decrease in tension after pulling hair.

Harvard offers workshops

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (CPS) — Harvard Law School's European Law Research Center has announced a new program designed to teach business executives and lawyers how to deal with Europe following the changes of the past two years.

Workshops offered through the center will focus on strengthening lawyers' and executives' understanding of the new European political and legal integration.

Companies already committed to the new program include AT&T, Exxon, Kraft, Levi Strauss and Bristol-Myers.

Ostrich stranglers punished

BATON ROUGE, La. (CPS) — Three Louisiana State University students accused of strangling a 220-pound ostrich were ordered to clean up excrement at an animal shelter for 200 hours each.

Robert A. Roberts, 21; Brian B. Jones, 22; and Phillip R. Robinson, 22, all of Baton Rouge, pleaded guilty to criminal trespassing when they entered a research pen near the LSU veterinary school and strangled a year-old ostrich.

The community service work is for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.
